Rising land bids push new condo prices into focus – will S$3,000 psf be a new normal?

By Ry-Anne Lim
limmin@sph.com.sg

NEW residential projects are increasingly setting fresh benchmark prices, as higher bids for government land sale (GLS) sites escalate baseline costs and push up new launch pricing.

Strong take-up at freshly marketed projects over the last two years has given developers greater confidence to compete aggressively for GLS sites, analysts said.

But higher land costs immediately raise the floor on pricing, lifting project break-even levels already pulled up by rising construction costs.

This leaves developers to test whether buyers can absorb higher prices when the projects are launched in one to two years' time.

PropNex data indicated that the average land rate for sites with a residential component sold in the first five months of 2026 was S$1,397 per square foot per plot ratio (psf ppr).

This was almost 13 per cent higher than the S$1,240 psf ppr average in 2025, which was in turn 10

That land bids have trended higher recently is in part due to differences in quality and location of sites on the annual GLS programme, with distinctly more prime sites released in the last year.

Stripping out location as a factor, a closer look at sites sold by region shows that land prices went
